

The invitation

Sometimes what is known for me
For you is the unknown

This creates for us a problem
Because if I invite you into me, into my world
Then I am responsible for you.
You don't know what you are stepping into
And so it's impossible for you to make an informed decision.

But this is life, no ?
Children are born into the unknown
And we guide them into knowing.

Yes, but to which knowing is the question
And if we are not careful with that
Then inevitably this becomes a problem

So what I have learned so far is this :

I should never invite you into my world
Unless I am sure you belong there
Because if you don't, you will be ashamed
And afterwards you will be resentful or worse, overpowered, you will lose yourself,
And what would be the point of that ?

So now what?
Should I invite you into the mystery or should I not?

My answer is yes, but with two conditions :

First. Is that you ask it of me
So that you are clear that I did not force you !

Second. It is important that we both agree and understand
That it is not my world that I am inviting you into
The world I am inviting you into is your own.
